Yes. There are some places in CERN summer student program for non-member state countries. Not many, that is why it is extra hard to get internship. I have heard about non-member state interns at CERN being supported by joint CERN-ICTP programme, see ICTP link above, perhaps it is worth investigating

As already mentioned before, there is summer student program for non-member states (Studentships in Summer \(Non Member State Nationals\) )

Besides that, there is summer student program in OpenLab. It's open for students regardless their citizenship. Though, you must finish at least 3 years of your studies by the next summer. From my experience I can say that it is amazing experience and I can reccoment it to everyone.

And you definitely can get an internship there, if they find you suitable for some role there ;)

Good luck!

This depends on a lot of factors. Cloth diapers and disposable diapers have a very different set of pros and cons, so the answer is different for different people: Cloth diapers: Pros:

- One-time cost
- Good for environment
- Not as absorbent, so your baby will alert you more quickly when they're

If you lead a flexible life, then I would recommend moving to a country/region where they speak the language you want to learn. What might take two years of college to learn will only take a summer immersed in a foreign language environment. If you like the structure of a class, then taking a community college class might be a good option. They are often held at hours suitable
